Speech and language practice after stroke

These pages were built from the practice activities in NeuroRecover — an app one family made after a stroke, so practice could happen at the kitchen table between speech therapy sessions.

Use them in any order. Five minutes counts. Stop before frustration, not after it.

PLEASE NOTE

These are practice activities, not medical treatment, and they do not replace care from a licensed speech-language pathologist. If speech changes are new or sudden, contact a doctor.

Every section in this pack can also be played out loud, free, at neurorecover.app/free-aphasia-games

How to help without giving the answer

Start at the top. Only move down a step when they stall. Each step gives a little more help — so they keep the part they can still do.

Wait 10 full seconds. Retrieval is slow before it is impossible. Silence is the most useful thing you can offer.

Point at the problem. “Something in there isn’t right — can you find it?”

Give the category. “It should be something you drive.”

Give the first sound. “It starts with wh...”

Offer a choice of two. “Is it a wheel or a window?”

Say it, then hand it back. “Wheel. Can you say the whole sentence?”

THREE RULES THAT MATTER MORE THAN THE EXERCISES

1. A correct idea in the wrong words is still a success — credit it.
2. End every session on something they got right.
3. Short and often beats long and rare.
